SOMETHING OF A PUZZLE

But of Course the Reader Can Easily Find Out for Himself Just What Baby's Age Was.

Dear News: We have in our home a darling baby boy, who was four months old on January 20 last.

When was he five months old?—Mother.
Your little tottums boy is four months old, eh? What a cunning little thing he must be! Of course, he is more cunning now than he will be when he begins to cut his teeth. You made no mention of Father, Mother. I hope Father is well. I wouldn't want you to think I am knocking Father at all—far from it, but, just between you and me, I don't think I would let Father hold tottums or hug him about very much. What does a man, even though he be a father and husband, know about handling a baby? Father is just as likely to pick tottums up by the heels as any other way—and also liable to let the dear little thing slip through his hands to the floor. Safety first for tottums, Mother?

However, you want to know when your baby was five months old. You say he was four months old last January 20. Very well—listen!

Tottums was five months old on February 20 and—no—just a minute, Mother—I don't mean that exactly—on second thought I see I spoke hastily. As a matter of fact there is no such date as February 20—haha! teehee!—that was laughable, wasn't it, Mother?—quite absurd and ridiculous in the extreme! Now let us get down to brass brads on this, Mother.

Since tottums was four months old on January 20, one would naturally suppose that the child would be five months old on the 20th of the month following. But in this case the month following—February—ain't got no 20th! Right there's the rub, Mother, and we'll have to govern ourselves accordingly.

Offhand I should say that tottums was five months old on March 2 because—now, now, that won't do, either. For if he's five months old on March 2 then he'll be six months old on April 2 and when we get around to the first anniversary of tottums' birth we're gonna be all belted up and—excuse me a moment, Mother—I'm called to the telephone—I may be back, Mother, and I may not!—New-York News-Kirk in the Boston Post.

War Boomed Photography.

It was inevitable that the war would produce some industrial surprises and additions; yet it will seem strange to be men in the street that one of the trades which has prospered, especially in the continent, is that of photography. Putting press photography aside, war does not suggest itself as a time when people would want specially to be photographed, and it is true that a good deal of the work has been the result of necessity. In the beginning of the war, when every household in western and middle Europe was sending out some member, it was natural that those departing should, when possible, have been photographed for their relatives. When they were gone they demanded photographs of wives, children or sweethearts, so that there was a great trade in the manufacture of picture post cards to that end. Then, when the trade might have languished, the soldier stepped in.—Manchester Guardian.

Alaskans Boycott Church.

The natives of Haines have declared a boycott against the Presbyterian mission here, and they refuse to go to church because the missionary closed the hall where they had been holding their dances.

The trouble started over the attempts of the dusky women of Haines to learn the latest society dances. Joe "huck" who had been to Juneau, where he had seen the tango, with all its variations, held his Haines partner in a manner unbecoming to the high standards set by Haines society.

She complained to her husband, and he fight which resulted lasted several minutes. As the pastor owns a self interest in the hall, he locked the doors and kept the keys. The natives then decided to retaliate by staying away from church.—Skagway (Alaska) Correspondence to New York Sun.

Quiet Frogs With Salt.

Cudahy (Cal.) boasts a magician who has power over frogs. This marvel, a woman, lives where the ground is low and the water gathers when it rains. And in the rain the aforesaid frogs come home to roost and to croak.

Now, a croaking frog is some nuisance when one desires to sleep. Mrs. M. H. Murphy, who lives on Mary street, stood the serenade the first night very well. But the second night her nerves got ragged around the edges, and on the third night she cracked her brains for a way to silence the frogs.

Her subconscious mind came to the rescue and suggested a remedy she first heard in childhood. This was to feed the melodious frogs with salt. Five pounds of salt covered Frogtown next morning, and the singers moved out.

None for Him.

Yeast—What do you think of the 24-hour clocks?
Crimsonbeak—None for me.
"Why so?"
"Isn't it bad enough when a fellow's crawling upstairs with his shoes in his hands in the early morning to have the old thing strike three without having a have his nerves racked by 15 strokes?"
